    Theogony, attributed to the ancient Greek poet Hesiod, provides a detailed account of the genealogy of the gods and the creation of the cosmos.
    In the beginning, Chaos, a formless void, gives birth to Gaia (Earth), Tartarus (the underworld), and Eros (love). From Chaos also emerge Erebus (darkness) and Nyx (night).
    Gaia, in turn, bears Uranus (the sky), and together they become the parents of the Titans, the Cyclopes, and the Hecatoncheires (hundred-handed giants).
    The complex family dynamics, conflicts, and alliances among these divine beings shape the early structure of the universe.

    <h3 style="float: right; margin-top: 10%;>Prometheus and the Creation of Humans</h3>
    In a lesser-known but significant creation myth, Prometheus, a Titan known for his intelligence and cunning, plays a central role in the formation of humanity.
    According to the myth, Prometheus defies the will of Zeus by stealing fire from the gods and bestowing it upon humanity. This act not only brings warmth and light to mortals but also symbolizes the gift of knowledge and civilization.
    To punish Prometheus and humanity, Zeus creates Pandora, the first woman, and sends her with a jar (often mistranslated as a box) containing all the evils of the world. Despite the hardships, hope remains inside the jar.
